- Your child's homebound teacher may need to contact your child's physician to obtain information pertaining to the planning and delivery of appropriate instruction.
- It is your responsibility to provide a safe and sanitary environment conducive to learning. This includes the removal of pets from the learning area, the reduction of distractions such as visitors and television, and the provision of a smoke-free environment.
- It is your responsibility to provide supervision while the teacher is in your home. You or another mutually agreed upon adult MUST be present in the home during each instructional session.

- You are responsible for your child's attendance during the scheduled lessons.
- You are responsible for supervising the completion of assigned classwork between homebound sessions.
- Homebound instruction may be terminated if the student consistently fails to be available for instruction and/or fails to complete the required assignments. Absences reported for these sessions will count as unexcused absences and may result in the student's loss of credit. Services may also be terminated if the student refuses to work or demonstrates aggressive or violent behavior toward the teacher of homebound students.

If your child or another family member is ill, has a fever or a contagious disease, instruction will be cancelled or re-scheduled. Students not available for instruction at the scheduled time will be considered unexcused unless advanced arrangements are made with the teacher.
